Cardinal Gibbons, prelate of the old diocese, arrived from Cleveland on a special train. He was escorted by a large delegation of the Catholic societies and an immense number of citizens. He was escorted through the streets by civil and religious organizations. He was taken out to Notre Dame University. Along the route the business houses and residences were decorated. His entrance was welcomed by a large number of citizens. Rev. Father Walsh, president of the university, to which the cardinal replied in complimentary terms, congratulating

North Dame is the great popularity as an educational institution, and on many occasions has been the scene of religious jubilee. Among the other churches visited were St. John's, which warmly welcomed the cardinal, were Archbishop Elder, Cincinnati; Archbishop Ireland of St. Paul; Bishop Deane, of Fort Wayne, Burke, of Wyoming, Springfield, Ill., Ryan, of St. Louis, and Buffalo, Western, of Columbus, Westgrove, of Denver, and many other eminent priests and prelates.

Grand and impressive services were held yesterday in the church of the Sacred Heart, where the cardinal officiated, and which was crowded to the doors. Within the chancel rail were seven hundred priests, all in full vestments, and when the celebration of solemn
